

JARED DOURDEVILLE

Partner at H Partners

New York, New York, United States

Overview

Jared Dourdeville is a Partner at H Partners, an investment firm where he has worked since 2013. An alumnus of Harvard with a degree in Engineering Sciences, he recently gained prominence for his activist investor role as a board member at Harley-Davidson, advocating for significant leadership and strategic changes.

His background includes roles as a Research Associate at Harvard Business School and a Fellow at Harvards Office of Technology Development. This experience suggests a deep-seated interest in the intersection of academic research and practical business application, particularly in bringing new technologies from the lab to the marketplace.

Jared recently resigned from the board of Harley-Davidson, publicly citing "grave concerns" over the companys strategy and "cultural depletion. "

Topics They Care About

Shareholder Activism

As a representative for H Partners on Harley-Davidson's board, he resigned and launched a public campaign to challenge the company's leadership and strategic direction in 2025.

Corporate Governance

His resignation from the Harley-Davidson board explicitly cited a lack of accountability, transparency, and the need for a leadership refresh as primary concerns.

Corporate Culture

He specifically criticized Harley-Davidson for a "cultural depletion" and questioned its remote work policies, indicating a strong belief in the importance of in-person community for brand strength.

Brand Turnarounds

He was deeply involved in the strategy of reinvigorating the iconic Harley-Davidson brand, later becoming a vocal critic of the execution and leadership of that turnaround plan.

Long-Term Investing

His firm, H Partners, focuses on achieving exceptional returns over a multi-decade time horizon through a fundamental, bottom-up investment selection process.

Tech Commercialization

His early career as a fellow at Harvard involved evaluating commercial opportunities for university-generated IP, including nanoscale fuel cell membranes.

New England Patriots

[Predicted] Given his education at Harvard University and high school in Massachusetts, he likely follows major local sports franchises.
