

TODD BROWN

CEO at 180 Medical

Yukon, Oklahoma, United States

Overview

Todd Brown is the founder of 180 Medical, a leading nationwide provider of catheter and ostomy supplies. He started the company after a personal motocross accident resulted in a spinal cord injury, fueling his passion to provide compassionate care and quality medical supplies. He is an alumnus of the University of Central Oklahoma.

After his injury, Todd became active in wheelchair racing and the handcycle racing community, where he learned about the products that would improve his health and inspire his company. His personal journey of overcoming adversity and his entrepreneurial spirit are central to his story and the mission of his company, which he started in his garage.

His personal experience with a spinal cord injury led him to create a company to ensure others had access to better medical supplies and compassionate service.

Topics They Care About

Spinal Cord Injury

After a motocross accident left him paralyzed, he founded 180 Medical to improve the quality of life for others with similar injuries.

Patient-Centric Care

He created his company in response to his own negative experiences with medical suppliers, emphasizing compassion and understanding for the patient.

Entrepreneurship

Started 180 Medical from his home garage in 2002, growing it into a leading national supplier that was later acquired by Convatec.

Disability Advocacy

Through his company, he supports organizations like the Christopher & Dana Reeve Foundation and established a college scholarship for students with spinal cord injuries.

Adaptive Sports

He became involved in wheelchair and handcycle racing after his injury, a community that was pivotal in his journey to better health and his company's founding.

UCO Bronchos

[Predicted] Based on his attendance at the University of Central Oklahoma, he likely supports the university's athletic teams.
